Reflecting on the Contestations of the Rule of Law Narratives in the World Trading System

Yenkong Ngangjoh-Hodu is a Professor and Chair of International Economic Law and was until August 2022 the Head of the University of Manchester Law School, UK. His areas of expertise include world trade law, international investment law, international monetary law, international energy law and the law and policy of regional integration. His most recent book “African perspectives on international investment law” was published in 2021. His 2016 book titled “The Political Economy of WTO Implementation and China’s Approach to Litigation in the WTO” is currently being translated into Chinese. He is regularly consulted by governments, regional organisations and United Nations Agencies on international trade and investment law. Yenkong has been a visiting Professor to many Universities in China, Europe, USA, and Africa.